INTRODUCTION

In a letter which he wrote me on January 16th, 1919, from Dublin, Henry Wheeler said:

> If you get to the Bibliographical Society General Meeting on Monday, and if there should be any announcement thereat as to the printing of the Wadham Catalogue, will you let me have a line? If nothing is said, I shan't expect to hear, as I know how furiously busy you are.

Whether or not anything was said on this occasion I have forgotten. At all events, the Society, which had been for some time considering the publication of this work, finally decided that it could not, the Catalogue being of too " local " an interest. Within a few months Wheeler was dead. Now, ten years later, means have at last been found for the publication of the only enduring work of a man who, had he not died in youth, would have shown himself both brilliant and sagacious, not only as a bibliographer. He had, for instance, a great picaresque book in him. Not one of his friends will doubt this; nobody else, perhaps, could be expected to believe it.

Henry Albert Wheeler was born at Eastleigh, Hants, on Sept. 20th, 1887, and went up to Wadham College, Oxford, in 1906. At Oxford, like many men of literary proclivities before and since, he read more widely in general literature than in books useful for examination purposes—though he worked hard enough to take a Second Class in Greats and to pass into the Home Civil Service at the end of his Oxford career. I did not know him then, but knowledge of him later, combined with conversations with himself and his friends, make it easy enough for me to form a picture of his undergraduate life. Never at any time was he a man of numerous semi-friendships. He rowed, and knew the people in his boat; beyond that, his friendships were few but deep, and mostly with men of an original turn of mind and unconventional habits. At Oxford, as later, he had an enormous acquaintance amongst people of a social class lower than his own. The University regulations were not made to fit such a man. There was not a single tavern in Oxford or the neighbourhood, however small and secluded, where he had not repaired now and again, a tall, dark, Scholar-Gipsy; later on one could go with him to the most curious places in Oxford, in London, and on the Thames water-side, up river, and find that he always knew the landlords and frequenters, male and female—hawkers, bookmakers, gamekeepers, gipsies, boat-builders, retired sea captains, all the sort of characters in whose conversation can be found raciness, popular wisdom, and that sort of candour which is killed by the good manners of the superior ranks of society. With such people Wheeler was always instantly on good terms; he seldom did much of the talking, having a slight stammer, being very modest, and being also intensely curious about the workings of the human mind, and always on the look-out for amusing things which would entertain himself and his friends later. He contrived to be a kind of vagrant when at Oxford; he even managed to be something of a vagrant in the Civil Service. One of his consolations, when in the Customs House, was the fact that Burns had been in the same employ and that there were documents there signed by, or referring to, that very untypical Civil Servant.

I first met him, I think, in the autumn of 1911 in the smoking-room of a London club, with one of his Oxford friends. At first sight I was more interested than attracted. He lay back in a chair, very long, very thin, very languid, talking unorthodoxies in what I thought a superior manner. He had a most extraordinary head and face. The head was long and narrow beyond any head I ever saw, though each feature was drawn out in such perfect proportion that he was extremely good-looking. A high forehead; beautifully arched eyebrows which seemed a vast distance above the dark, brilliant, heavily lidded eyes; pronounced cheek-bones; over-flushed hollow cheeks; a long, thin, slightly aquiline nose with sensitive nostrils; a mouth drooping at the corners, and usually slightly open; and a clean-cut, determined chin gave him an appearance of self-confidence and even superciliousness which quite absurdly belied him. When I left him the first time I did not know that we should ever meet again; within a few weeks a friendship had been founded which was bound to last until one of us died. For a time, in 1913, he lived with us on Chiswick Mall; then he moved to Strand-on-the-Green; then he married and went to live over the tow-path at Putney. Wherever he was we seldom missed seeing each other for more than a few days. Any Sunday morning a hail might come from the river, and I would go to look out of my window, and see, through overhanging branches, a skiff, sculls, and a lean figure in a zephyr who would shout arrangements for dinner that evening, or lunch next day, and a trip to a second-hand bookshop. Having his company, I never dreamed of better. He spoke slowly and carefully and hesitatingly in a quiet tenor: with a gift for full-flavoured precision which I have never known excelled. Often I used to go down to the Customs House where he was employed and fetch him out. Our opening remarks would generally run on these lines:

> S.: Hallo! What have you been doing this morning?
> W.: D-d-dog licences in Cumberland.

Then we would have a rapid snack and a tour of the local inns or the hawkers' barrows in the Whitechapel Road. Under my eyes there he one day picked up for a shilling a large and fine copy, full of woodcuts, of a book printed by Richard Pynson.

If such a thing were there he was bound to get it and not I. He seemed to have an uncanny instinct which made his hand go straight for the one rarity on a shelf even when it was some little book with an insignificant modern binding on it. There was a shop in the East End that we both of us haunted for years. It has probably been tidied up by now. Two very philosophical, laconic, fair-minded, sedentary brothers had inherited a cob-webbed shop with an immense stock from a father whose tastes were more bookish than their own. The stock had grown and grown until it was quite unmanageable. The cellar was piled six feet deep in books; one had to go down there with a candle or an electric torch and force a passage through them; even a spade would have been handy. Upstairs was a long room stretching back from a narrow frontage, with crammed shelves reaching to the ceiling, and a sort of mound, or Long Barrow, of books running from front to back of the shop in the middle. Here, at any moment of the day, one brother or the other might be found sitting at the back of the shop on a great heap of books, bowler-hatted, moustached, rubicund, smoking his pipe, waiting for customers to approach him with possible purchases in their hands, and willing to accept any reasonable offer. I often went there alone and picked up many early-printed books and volumes of old verse, valuable in more than one way. In the evening Wheeler would probably come round. I would show him my find. It was seldom, indeed, that he had not already seen the book; even when it had come from the innermost and lowest recesses of one of the Messrs. X's mounds or pyramids of books, I seldom produced anything which Henry Wheeler had not already seen. Very often the finds were his rather than mine; for he had seen something which he considered " off his beat " and told me about it. Often we went there together; and it was extraordinary to see him step quietly up a ladder, pick some obscure little pamphlet out of a shelf, bring it down, and purchase it for a few shillings. I remember one occasion in particular when from somewhere near the ceiling he detached a little black-letter volume which proved to be a collection of Henry the Eighth's Statutes, which I believe is still absent from the British Museum's set. He died at thirty-one ; he had very little money ; he was unable to buy a tenth of the things that he would have liked to have bought. Yet he picked up obscure works by people like Crashaw even out of catalogues. Catalogues were propped up against the cruet when he had breakfast; more catalogues, or perhaps bibliographies, were his staple reading in the train. In his short career as a collector he accumulated an immense knowledge of obscure and anonymous books; and he was aided by the sort of memory which enabled him to say at once whether a book should or should not have a portrait or a half-title simply because he had once, years before, seen it described in a catalogue.

Before writing this little tribute to his memory I searched my house for letters from him. Most of his letters seem to have disappeared. A few scraps are all that I can find. I will quote one or two of these simply to give an indication, as it were, of his tone of voice. In 1912 he was suddenly annoyed by somebody writing an article called "The Ideal Pub." He wrote and told me. I was then on a weekly, now dead; and he proposed to reply. The postscript to the letter ran:

> P.S. I have not been able to think of a title unless it be "A Pub-crawler's Complaint Against Idealists and Others," which is rather long. If you accept the essay, call it what you like.

Here is a whole letter, written in the last year of his life:

> Your letters were gratefully received. Though I am still in bed, I confidently hope that I am now on the verge of being let out of it by the end of this week, and am keenly supporting the theory of Friday's Daily News that this is the third of the three waves of which epidemics consist. As I have been a case in each of them, and twice extra, I should have a good chance of immunity if the theory were true.
> I was not surprised to hear of the big programme of Bibliog. Soc. publications; it means books for us anyhow, though some of them might be more interesting than a Register of Middle English Verse. I am now for the first time in temporary occupation of a copy of Dyce's edition of Skelton, which is giving me great amusement and discloses some quite fine hymns, as well as satires. The official laureate poems are of course dull, and I have not tried the interludes; but some of the rest of the verse is a real surprise. Dyce, needless to say, has good notes. Buy a copy if you ever see one cheap; £3 or £4 is sometimes asked, if not more. These two last months are unique among those of my last five years; during them I have bought no book, tho' I have been more than once on the verge of getting McKerrow's Printers' Marks to cheer the long hours. I should have them pretty well by heart by the time I was in full flight again, and that would be a solid good. But doctors', chemists', and nurses' bills have, so far, turned the edge of my resolution.

I am comfortably supplied with ordinary literature, but if you should have Boom by Wm. Caine, I should like a loan of it. I have been through a good heap of his others with lots of amusement. I have been having a strong burst of Trollope and am now making a second complete run through Peacock—all profitable.

With love to E. and the Cygnine youth (recent study of Milton)

Yours ever,

It is a very curious thing, but I did ultimately come across a copy of Dyce, priced not at a few shillings, but at one dollar, in a bookshop, in a back street in Washington, D.C. (no less), seven years ago—and brought it back to England. This letter, incidentally, illustrates two things. One is that to the author of this Catalogue, bibliographer though he was, books were primarily things to be read; and the other is the catholicity of his taste. The letter was written from Dublin. In another letter he writes:

I am expecting to see Magee, alias Eglinton, shortly, almost my sole acquaintance among the literati here, and thro' him I can have a free run in the National Library without formality of applications for books. He is an agreeable man.

He was in Dublin. He came back to England and spent his last months in the country in Hampshire. His wife nursed him devotedly. His letters were serenely cheerful to the end. One of his last visitors said: "I feel when I come out of Henry's room as if I had been conversing with some saint." Then on August 4th, 1919, "he woke from quiet sleep and was gone in a few moments. He spent yesterday afternoon lying outside his hut in the fresh air, watching the birds." That was the last news I had of one of the most gentle and charitable souls I have ever known, a wit devoid of cynicism, an intellectual who was loved by some very ordinary people, a scholar free from pedantry.

This Catalogue was mostly compiled in the previous year. He was repeatedly rejected from the army during the war, and in 1918 he ultimately had to go on indefinite leave of absence (though I don't think he ever quite knew how ill he was) and settled for some months in Oxford. The work as it stands is not finally revised, but we thought it better to leave it as it left his hands, and to apologise for any slips which he might have corrected. There are some entries in it which were in no Wadham catalogue before he came: books bound up with other books, and, in one instance, a rare fragment of fifteenth-century English printing found in the binding of some quite uninteresting work. He told me about all his discoveries; characteristically, he does not disclose them in his catalogue. Reader, take them for granted.

NOTE

The books are catalogued in the alphabetical order of the authors' names, whenever known.

In most cases, words have been omitted from the titles and imprints in order to save space, omissions from titles being marked by dots. The original spelling has been retained. Bindings have been mentioned only when they are, roughly, contemporary as well as being unusually good.

The name of the donor, when known, is given in round brackets immediately after the press-mark, certain names being abbreviated as follows:—

Philip Bisse	B. (d. 1612)
Gilbert Drake	D. (1600-1629)
John Griffiths	G. (1806-1885)
Alexander Thistlethwayte	T. (1718-1771)
Richard Warner	W. (1713-1775)

The following symbols are used:

(Col.)	Information within brackets derived from the colophon.
( )	Information derived from the book itself, but not from title-page or colophon.
[ ]	Information derived from other sources.
